Family Reading Advice

A recurring phrase in a book helps children follow the story, and feel active while reading, enhancing the shared experience. You can read this phrase in a special voice, add hand gestures, or change the reading pace. That way, every time you reach it, your children will happily join in.

More and More

The tendency to want more and more is very familiar in kids' lives – you can discuss with your children and ask: Why did Lady Bezalel drop everything she was holding? Do you think she needed everything she bought? In your opinion, how did she feel when she dropped them? Has anything similar ever happened to you? What would you advise Lady Bezalel to do?

The Grocery List

After having read this book several times, you can have some fun and check – who can remember all the items Lady Bezalel bought and in what order?

Be Careful not to Drop Them!

How many toys and items can you hold without dropping them? This book can inspire you to go around the house, picking up stuffed animals, (non-breakable) toys, cushions and other soft items, and then decide on a “path” from point A to point B. Now take turns holding as many of these items as you can. Walking along the track while carrying them all – did you drop anything? Now you can go back to the beginning.

That is so Good!

What makes you feel good? At the end of the day, before bedtime, you can play a game during which each of you tells the others about something good that happened to you today, or about something that makes you feel good.
